Bonneville County Sheriff's Office Receives Recognition

The Idaho Falls Police Department recognized the Bonneville County Sheriff's Office for 100 years of service Wednesday.

IFPD Police Chief Steve Roos presented Bonneville County Sheriff Paul Wilde with a special award commemorating the sheriff's office and the county's 100th birthday during the Idaho Falls Rotary Club meeting.

"I would like to thank Chief Roos and the Idaho Falls Police Department for their thoughtfulness and continued cooperation in Law Enforcement to our Community," Wilde said. "We are extremely fortunate to have such a great working relationship between agencies and our Community benefits from the cooperation and professional service."

The IFPD and the sheriff's office have collaborated on a number of projects together and have worked closely together to build a great deal of trust and respect for each other.

"This type of close cooperation isn't always common in law enforcement, but Paul and I recognize that this cooperation is vital in bringing the criminals to justice and using tax dollars wisely," Roos said. "I congratulate the Sheriff's Office on celebrating their 100th birthday and commend them for their professionalism."

Bonneville County was officially formed Feb. 7, 1911. The county is marking its centennial year with an array of events and programs.
